Colorado

Overview When complete, the US 36 Bikeway will offer a convenient and safe non-motorized route for traveling between Denver and complexes such as Broomfield's Flatiron Crossing, the US 36 Bikeway also offers mountain views and pockets of beauty as the trail winds through preserved open space and several parks.

Connections

A number of trails connect to the US 36 bikeway including the Coal Creek Regional Trail, Big Dry Creek Trail, and the Farmer's High Line Canal Trail.

Overview

When complete, the US 36 Bikeway will offer a convenient and safe non-motorized route for traveling between Denver and Boulder. Eleven miles of the paved trail—which locals refer to as a “commuter highway for bicyclists”—opened in June 2015; this first phase parallels US 36 from Westminster (a northwestern suburb of Denver) to the Louisville/Superior area. Along the way, barriers and wide grassy medians separate the pathway from traffic.

About the Route
