On the southwestern outskirts of Los Angeles, the Laguna Dominguez Trail spans just shy of 3 miles, connecting the cities of

The Alondra Community Regional Park, also on the trail's southern end, offers many recreational amenities, including a golf course, ballfields, pool, splash pad, and small lake.

On the southwestern outskirts of Los Angeles, the Laguna Dominguez Trail spans just shy of 3 miles, connecting the cities of Lawndale and Hawthorne (named for famed American author Nathaniel Hawthorne). Sometimes referred to as the Dominguez Channel Trail for the waterway it parallels, the trail is helping to transform this right-of-way along stormwater infrastructure into an urban open space for active living.

The trail's southern end is situated across from El Camino College, providing a convenient route for students to reach the Crenshaw Green Line Station, about a block from the trail's north end. Numerous shops, restaurants, and neighborhoods are also accessible along the paved pathway, which is beautified with native grasses and leafy brush.
