the trail branches, with the other path heading to the southeast, where it ends at the 133rd Street Path. Past the park on the other branch, the trail continues through trees and fields before coming to an end at 133rd Street, where the 133rd Street Path allows users to extend their journey across the suburban outskirts of Olathe.

The Eastbrooke Trail forms a useful link between the city of Olathe's 133rd Street Path and the lengthy regional backbone, the Indian Creek Bike/Hike Trail. This paved, short trail serves as a nice addition to the area's trail network, and an amenity for local residents along its route.

Starting in the north, the trail heads south from the Indian Creek Trail and crosses over the creek. The path runs under 127th Street via an underpass, and proceeds into a pleasantly wooded corridor located between quiet residential neighborhoods. Numerous access points along the way allow residents from the adjacent neighborhoods to hop on and off the trail, as the trail continues to the south into Eastbrooke Park, which hosts a water fountain, playground, and picnic shelter. Shortly before the park,
