Follow the Sacramento Northern Bikeway for a tour of Sacramento and its surrounding communities, weaving through historic neighborhoods and parks and finishing in a scenic rural area. The paved trail also connects with a number of other local and regional trails and serves as a vital community resource for recreation and commuting to work and school. There are numerous shaded areas and rest kiosks along the trail where you might want to take a breather, especially if you're visiting during Sacramento's hot summer.

The trail runs along the former right-of-way of the Sacramento Northern Interurban Railway, which carried passengers between Sacramento and Chico until the line closed in the mid-1940s. Today you can enjoy many of the bridges and structures that were built for the railway.

Begin near downtown Sacramento on C Street between 19th and 20th streets and head north through an industrial area. After about 0.5 mile, you come to a T junction in the trail; bear right and soon cross a trestle bridge over the American River. At the 1-mile mark, you reach another T junction; turn left to merge onto the American River Bike Trail (a.k.a. the Jedediah Smith Memorial Trail).

Immediately after crossing Del Paso Boulevard, you enter Discovery Park, a popular spot for recreational boaters and anglers. Bear right at the first fork, and a small rise carries you onto the raised former rail bed, which offers a nice view of the park and its ponds and waterfowl. Another 0.2 mile down the trail you cross an active rail line. From this point on the trail is straight, smooth, flat, tree-lined and landscaped. You'll pass through an attractive metal archway each time you reach a new neighborhood.

Near the 6-mile mark, the trail heads into an agricultural landscape. You cross a series of bridges and ride under canopies of mature trees, with cattle grazing in pastures on both sides of the trail. Near the 8-mile mark, the trail reaches the Rio Linda Chamber of Commerce and Rio Linda Community Center, which has an adjacent playing field and BMX bike park. The trail continues for another 2 miles, ending at Elverta Road. You can either ride back to the beginning or arrange for a shuttle.
