The Praeri Rail Trail runs on an old section of railroad right-of-way between Zearing and Roland in central Iowa. Sections of the trail near Roland and McCallsburg have a crushed limestone surface, but the rest of the trail is mowed grass and may be difficult for road bikes, as the grass is mowed infrequently. Remnants of native prairie habitat line the flat, straight-as-an-arrow trail. The section about 2 miles east of Zearing is farthest from nearby roads and thus offers the most diversity of wildlife habitat.

Development of the Praeri Rail Trail began in 1979. The unusual spelling of the name is derived from the area's strong Norwegian heritage.
