The Commonwealth Edison Bikeway is a short paved trail that occupies an overhead electric utility corridor owned by Commonwealth Edison, the local utility company—hence the trail's name. While lacking in scenery, the trail forms an important link in Woodridge's extensive system of bikeways. Longer trips are possible via connecting trails at the trail's two endpoints and along Hobson Road.

The main non-trail destination along the path's route is Castaldo Park on 71st Street. The small community park features a picnic area and shelter, disc golf course, volleyball court and playground.
